the story of all access

Meet Isna

While serving as a missionary in Haiti, founder Lane Kipp met Isna, a 15 pound three-year-old girl starving to death. While feeding her, he had the awful realization, "There are hundreds of millions of others just like Isna around the world in desperate need." This encounter sparked two years of research to figure out what we can do to help all of the Isna's of the world, and why we haven't been able to fix this problem by now.

"What would it take to end global physical and spiritual poverty?"

As a result his research, he learned that we can end global poverty, but it can't be accomplished the way charity is currently being done. Although the American church has more financial power, capability and influence than ever, more than half of the world still lives in urgent physical and spiritual need. Every year, more funds are given to charitable efforts than what global economists predict it would take to end global poverty. So where is the money going and why aren't we seeing the change?

There's a major problem with the current state of charity.

This led to the disturbing discovery of four systemic problems of the current state of non-profit development work: The lack of financial efficiency and transparency of charities, as well as the ineffective and unsustainable efforts of much global aid work, particularly by faith-based organizations.

Introducing All Access International

After years of research and coordination with experts in the field, Lane launched All Access International, a new innovative approach to global missions that addresses the four systemic problems of the non-profit sector while expediting the global missions endeavor. This approach is our best, and possibly only chance, at a world free of physical and spiritual poverty.

Core Values

Well, how did we do?

Efficiency

$0.00 of donations to The Collective Fund have been used for overhead expenses.

Our first project is anticipated to be significantly more cost effective than sending Western missionaries, according to our survey data from 7 of the top US missionary sending agencies. On average, it takes $88,000/yr. per missionary, and 500 missionaries to plant 104 churches a year.

Sustainability

Our projects implement the advice of global and local experts to ensure no harm is done and to maximize our sustainable impact.

Our first project is with a proven indigenous ministry that is experienced with the culture and language of the locals.

Effectiveness

We have surveyed and vetted organizations in our database to determine who can most effectively meet our goals and mission of ending global physical and spiritual poverty.

Our first project is expected to be significantly more effective than sending Western missionaries, as mentioned to the left.

Transparency

Donors have received monthly updates and quarterly reports with financial details, expenses, project updates and even pictures and stories from the field.

I completely trust All Access with making the most of my donations due to their high standards and strong moral values. There is no other non-profit that is this transparent with their donors because All Access truly doesn't have anything to hide." - Amanda T.

"After donating, we like following the monthly and quarterly updates on the partner page that show us exactly where the money goes and how they maximize its impact - with account balances, expenses, project summaries and updates, and even pictures from the field. The complete transparency is refreshing and the incredible impact gives us the confidence and motivation to continue donating." - John D.

"Making contributions to The Collective Fund allows you to designate that 100% of your donations are put to work to meet the spiritual and humanitarian needs of those most in need...and you receive regular updates on the specific outcomes that result from your donations.
